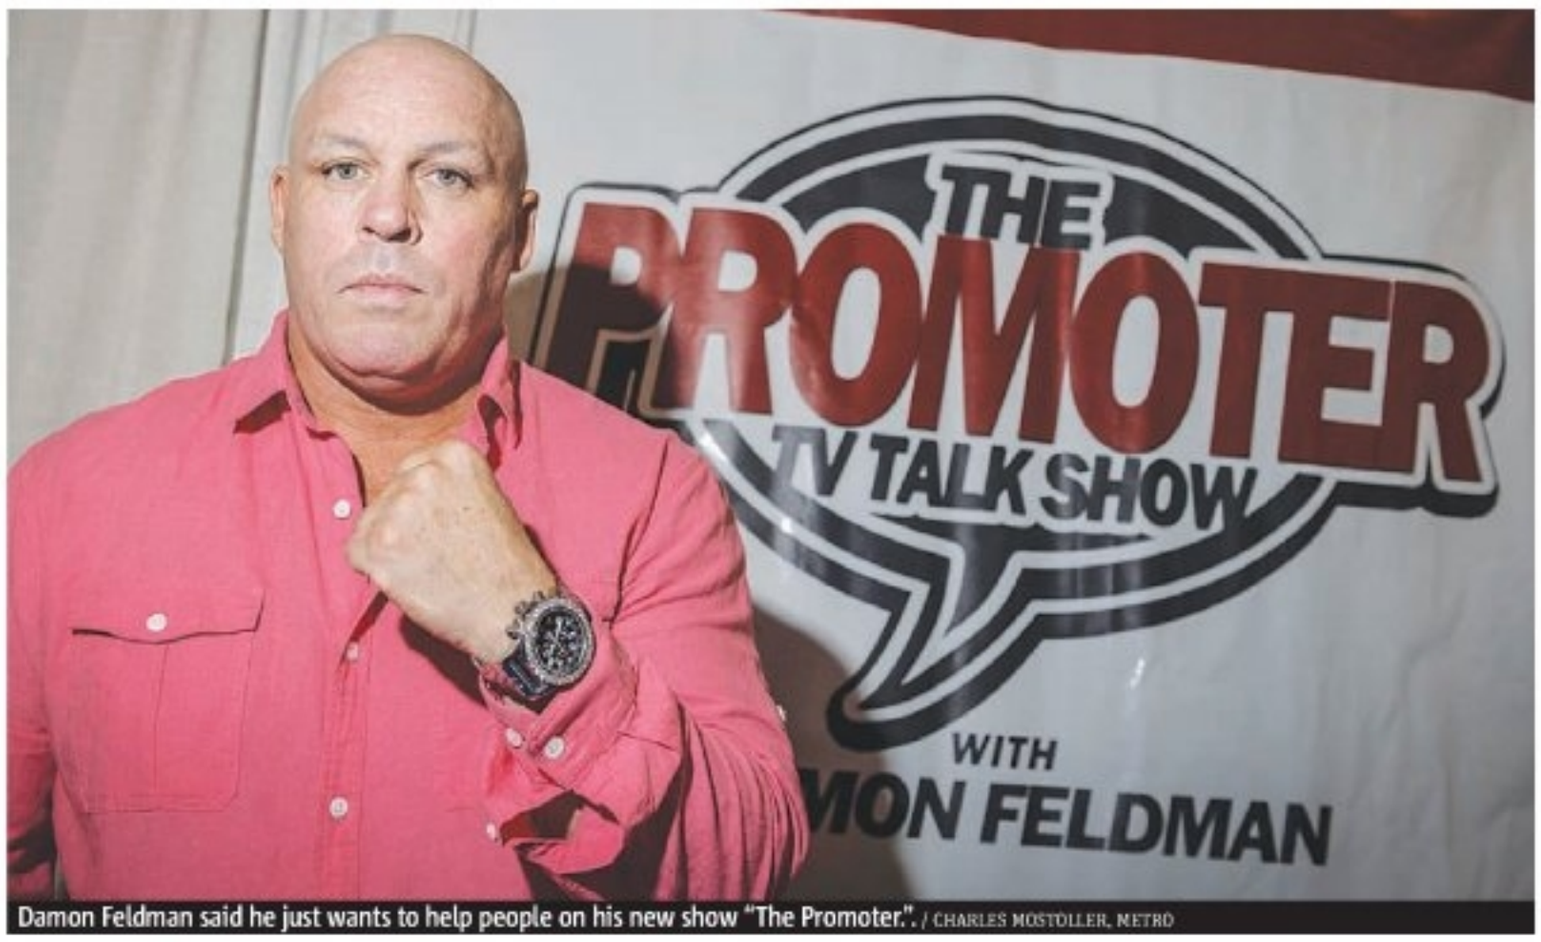
No pulled punches for ring promoter Feldman

Philadelphia. The boxing enthusiast embarks on his next main event: a television show.



Damon Feldman said he just wants to help people on his new show "The Promoter.". / CHARLES MOSTOLLER, METRO

As the impresario behind Philly's much-publicized Celebrity Boxing, Damon Feldman not only promotes minor-case newsmakers like Tan Mom and Michael Lohan, but also promotes himself — big time.

If his bouts are about anything, it's the self-created cult of Feldman, a pugilist who was en route to sporting fame before a 1998 injury ended that career. On the force of his own will, he crafted me-generation antics by any means necessary.

"I would love to step in the ring one more time," said Feldman, now 39.

As much as he loves boxing and D-list celebrities, Feldman has to admit that 2014 was rough. He caught flack for promoting a fight that never happened starring Trayvon Martin's accused murderer George Zimmerman.

But now, Feldman is starting a new career where all he has to rely on his himself, his co-hosts and his brand manager/partner Anne Gutos: a weekly, half-hour television show called "The Promoter with Damon Feldman" debuting at 10 p.m. Wednesday on WACP and IFameTV.com.

Visit Metro.us to see which celebs have boxed and who backed out.

Say what you will about Feldman, but with him, what you see is what you get, an entertainment biz rarity. And, if nothing else, Feldman knows what he's doing. He's dealt with all manner of media, local and global, including holding his own on "The Howard Stern Show."

"I'm a regular on [sports radio host] Angelo Cataldi's program. There's a guy who I've learned a lot from over the 220 times I've been on his show," Feldman said.

"The Promoter" has three segments: Lifestyle is people and products that enhance lives, Sports/Entertainment is those who live to succeed and Rising Star is fresh talent looking to take off.

Feldman is particularly proud of his first episodes and their mix of doctors, authors, realtors (Danny Salik), karate champs (Bobby Harris), notable actors (John Canada Terrell) and reality stars both new (Mikey P. from VH1's "Dating Naked") and old (Gervase Peterson of "Survivor").

"I'm hoping I make a difference in people's lives — and mine — in creating a platform for talents and businesses trying to promote themselves to people that may never get a chance to hear them or what they are," Feldman said. "I am the answer."

In the spotlight

Get 'real'

Certainly, the show is an opportunity for people with goods, services, pizazz and the desire to be famous to shine. In reality, though, it's Feldman's ultimate reality television routine.

"What I do overall is reality TV," he said. "I love the spotlight AND I want to help people. I want to help people achieve goals."

Logan. Cause of death maybe not hit and run

Police officials said Monday that a man previously believed to have been hit by a car and killed Saturday morning in Logan actually died after he was ejected from a moving vehicle.

Police said Monday that the medical examiner determined that because the man did not have any broken bones below the pelvic area that he must have been pushed or fell out of a moving vehicle.

The victim's body was found around 6 a.m. Saturday at Ninth Street and Wyoming Avenue with what authorities said were "road rash injuries" and some "small automobile car parts" were found on the victim's body that may have suggested a hit and run. TOMMY ROWAN

Police: Man kills brother after alleged argument

A 26-year-old man was murdered Monday morning by his brother, a police spokeswoman said.

According to Officer Jillian Russell, the victim was shot multiple times, including in his head and back, around 7:30 a.m. on the 2000 block of Rutledge Street in Kensington.

Police said the gunfire erupted after the two brothers allegedly got into an argument. The victim was pronounced dead on the scene.

A weapon was recovered by police. Russell said officials have made an arrest in the murder, but as of Monday evening, no charges had been filed.

Police are continuing to investigate.

Man, 60, dies in crash

An older male died just before 9 p.m. Sunday night when he crashed into a PECO utility pole, police said.

The victim, 60, was reportedly driving northbound in a 1999 Nissan Altima on Delaware Avenue when he failed to make a left turn on to Lewis Street, police said.

The victim was transported to Hahnemann Hospital where he was pronounced dead.

The victim's name and any explanation for the crash were not released.

Alcohol or drugs was not listed as a factor.

VIADUCTS ARE BEING REHABBED

When are the repairs to start on the Media/Elwyn bridges? These problems have been known for years, yet SEPTA only brings them out when they need a bargaining chip. We would like to see the money spent on what it was intended for.

You are correct. The problems have been known for years, and SEPTA did not have the resources to invest in this infrastructure. Now that Act 89 was passed and we had the funding in place, SEPTA's engineering and construction staff immediately got to work on "Rebuilding for the Future." And at the top of our "To-do" list was the rehabilitation of the Media/Elwyn Regional Rail Line's four steel viaducts built in the 1890s.

We are moving forward to address critical infrastructure needs and have already gone through the bidding process to begin replacing the bridge timbers that support the rails on the viaducts over Cobbs and Darby creeks, starting in September. Select structural repairs will also be made. To complete this work, the line will be shut down on 10 consecutive weekends starting Sept. 20-21. Service for the line will be provided by shuttle buses. Notices for this service substitution have been posted.

Quoted

"Now that Act 89 was passed and we had the funding in place, SEPTA's engineering and construction staff immediately got to work on 'Rebuilding for the Future.'"

This is the initial phases of the bridge work along the Media/Elwyn Line. But there is much more work to be done. The rehabilitation of the viaduct over the Ridley Creek along with foundation strengthening and painting of the Cobbs and Darby Creek viaducts is scheduled to start in the spring of 2015. The replacement of the 1,000-foot viaduct over Crum Creek will begin next summer, and the Crum Creek Viaduct will be taken out of service and replaced in 2016.

SEPTA will also be strengthening and rehabilitating the stone arch bridge near Wallingford Station. Construction on this bridge will start early next spring.

SEPTA has also started working on other key infrastructure initiatives along this line.

So as you can see, the much needed funding is indeed being used to repair and rebuild the entire SEPTA system.

Dry cleaner shop burns in Labor Day fire

A business founded in 1968 was seriously damaged by a fire Monday.

Award Dry Cleaners, near Ridge Avenue and Walnut Lane, which specialized in wedding gowns, caught fire at 5 a.m. The fire blazed for 90 minutes before it was brought under control at 6:30 a.m., reports say.

It is believed that dry cleaning chemicals might have fueled the fire.

No injuries were reported and the cause of the fire was not reported as of press time. METRO

Apple has plans for iPhone wallet

Security. Apple will make paying with your phone easier and safer using its fingerprint reader.

Apple Inc. plans to turn its next iPhone into a mobile wallet through a partnership with major payment networks, banks and retailers, according to a person familiar with the situation.

The agreement includes Visa Inc., MasterCard Inc. and American Express Co. and will be unveiled on Sept. 9 along with the next iPhone, said the person, who asked not to be identified.

The new iPhone will make mobile payment easier by including a near-field communication chip for the first time, the person said. That advancement along with Touch ID, a fingerprint recognition reader that debuted on the most recent iPhone, will allow consumers to securely pay for items in a store with the touch of a finger.

While companies such as Google have invested in creating ways for phones to make payments in a physical store, U.S. retailers have been slow to adopt the technology, thus limiting the use by shoppers, according to Ben Bajarin, an analyst for Creative Strategies LLC in San Jose, California. That could change with Apple entering the market because iPhones have the largest market share in the U.S., he said. BLOOMBERG

Iraq

UN: Islamists driving atrocities

The United Nations agreed on Monday to send investigators to Iraq to examine crimes being committed by Islamic State militants on "an unimaginable scale," with a view to holding perpetrators to account.

"We are facing a terrorist monster," Iraq's human rights minister, Mohammed Shia' Al Sudani, told the U.N. Human Rights Council, which adopted a resolution tabled by Iraq and France at an emergency session.

Islamic State, which declared a "caliphate" in June in parts of Iraq and Syria under its control, has been cited as a major security threat by Western governments since posting a video in August of the beheading of U.S journalist James Foley.

The Sunni militants have driven more than 1.2 million people from their homes this year, the United Nations says. At least 1,420 people were killed in sectarian violence in Iraq in August alone, U.N. figures showed on Monday.

U.N. Deputy High Commissioner for Human Rights Flavia Pansieri said there was "strong evidence" Islamic State had carried out targeted killings, forced conversions, sexual abuse and torture in Iraq. REUTERS

President. Obama notifies Congress of ordering air strikes

Obama chose to broaden the U.S. military role in Iraq. / GETTY IMAGES

President Barack Obama formally notified Congress on Monday that he had authorized airstrikes and humanitarian airdrops over the weekend in the Iraqi Shi'ite town of Amerli where Islamic State militants had trapped the civilian population.

Iraqi security forces, backed by Shi'ite militias, on Sunday broke the two-month siege of Amerli and entered the northern town after the U.S. military carried out air strikes on militant positions and delivered emergency supplies to residents there.

Obama said in a letter to congressional leaders that he was notifying Congress of his decision under the long-standing War Powers Resolution, which gives presidents authorization for temporary military action. The operation was launched Saturday.

Obama said "targeted" airstrikes had been needed to deliver humanitarian assistance there and that the operations would be "limited in their scope and duration" as required by the situation on the ground.

When Obama ordered the first airstrikes and airdrops in Iraq in early August, he justified the military operation in part to prevent a humanitarian catastrophe for thousands of ethnic Yazidis trapped by Islamic State militants on Sinjar mountain in northern Iraq.

Obama has faced criticism from lawmakers from both parties for what many see as indecisiveness in confronting Islamic State, which has taken over swathes of Iraq and Syria, and for not consulting them more on the issue. Republicans seized on Obama's comment on Thursday that "we don't have a strategy yet" for dealing with Islamic State. REUTERS

Military

President Obama still has tough decisions ahead.

- The White House has insisted that Obama must deliberate carefully before making final decisions on whether to expand U.S. air strikes into Syria.
- White House National Security Council spokeswoman Caitlin Hayden described the aim of the Amerli operation as "consistent with the military missions we have outlined to date in Iraq – to protect U.S. personnel and facilities and to address the humanitarian situation on the ground."

The keys to buying low, selling high

Investing. Learn how rebalancing can keep you in the green.

Taking a close look at costs and tax consequences will yield positive results. / GETTY IMAGES

Investors who wish they were better at buying low and selling high actually have a tool that can force them to do just that. It's called "rebalancing," the practice of regularly re-allocating a portfolio so the investments in it stay in their originally intended proportions.

Rebalancing is easy for workers who invest through their company 401(k) plan. Large company retirement plans often let workers leave standing automatic rebalancing orders, so their portfolios can be adjusted quarterly or annually.

But individual investors who have non-retirement portfolios of their own have to work harder to make rebalancing work. They also have to rebalance manually, instead of on autopilot. Here's how to do it:

Tip

Don't just stick with the calendar

Set a band of 5 or 10 percent, and when one part of your portfolio outgrows its intended allocation by that much, think about rebalancing. You'll miss the top of the market, but you'll take solid earnings off the table.

Plan for tax consequences

It's better to hold taxable securities for at least a full year so they can qualify for lower long-term capital gains tax rates. You can cut your taxes further by selling your losing investments while you're selling your winners, to lock in those losses. You can rebuy the same losing investment in 31 days, or simply buy a similar but different one immediately to complete the rebalancing.

Consider costs

If you have to rebalance via a brokerage account that has high transaction fees, rebalance less often. That was the conclusion of a paper published recently in the Journal of Portfolio Management. Bank of America's Merrill Lynch researcher Himanshu Almadi and others said investors facing low costs would do better rebalancing quarterly, and those facing higher costs should rebalance once a year. REUTERS

Turn your awesome idea into cash

President Obama hosted Maker Faire this summer to hear inventors' big ideas. / GETTY IMAGES

Moneymaker. Napoleon Hill has some tips.

We've all had moments where we're pretty sure we've just thought up the perfect million-dollar business idea. But most of us never take action, so our dreams remain just that. "Think and Grow Rich," by Napoleon Hill, is one of the best-selling books of all time, and Hill has devoted his career to teaching others how to be successful. The author is about to release a new starter kit to help readers find financial success.

What makes the kit better than the many "get rich quick" books out there is that it's a workbook with actionable steps that can be personalized to each reader. Every chapter is a new step toward securing your riches. For example, one of the chapters requires readers to list people to contact who can help further their ideas. Another chapter focuses on how to sustain faith in your idea, even when it doesn't seem to be going anywhere. There is also a lengthy chapter on planning, to ensure follow-through on your goal-making.

With more than 50 exercises and 13 steps, reading "Think and Grow Rich" is not a passive experience. It takes time and commitment — but if you are serious about making money, it could be worth the $29.95. (However, if you're looking to secure your fortune through investing and not inventing, this might not be the best book for you.)

While making money is definitely the focus of the starter kit, there is more emphasis than you might expect on personal fulfillment and happiness that comes outside of financial successful. Most finance books don't delve too much into a bigger "meaning of life" theme, but Hill makes a point of reminding readers that money can't provide true happiness, and there are motivational quotes throughout the book that also echo the sentiment.

Creepy hackers release creepy naked celeb photos for the Internet's creeps

It's been a while since there was a celebrity nude photo leak, so some industrious and not-at-all-creepy hackers got together to unleash one doozy of a Labor Day Weekend photo dump, posting images allegedly of more than 100 stars including Kate Upton, Kirsten Dunst, Ariana Grande and Jennifer Lawrence. The images, reportedly culled from iCloud accounts, were initially posted to that bastion of online decency 4Chan before going wide on Twitter. Lawrence, for her part, isn't taking this lying down. "The authorities have been contacted and will prosecute anyone who posts the stolen photos of Jennifer Lawrence," her publicist says in a statement.

Some of the hacking victims, such as Grande, singer Victoria Justice and Olympic gymnast McKayla Maroney, were quick to dismiss the risque images as fakes, but others confirmed their legitimacy. "To those of you looking at photos I took with my husband years ago in the privacy of our home, hope you feel great about yourselves," Mary Elizabeth Winstead tweeted. "Knowing those photos were deleted long ago, I can only imagine the creepy effort that went into this. Feeling for everyone who got hacked."

ARIANA GRANDE WANTS TO "BREAK FREE" FROM ALL THIS HACKING DRAMA.

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

When a celebrity's private photos are leaked online, it's easy to jump to the conclusion that they only have themselves to blame, since they took the photo in the first place, but that's a terrible way to look at things. The notion "don't take nude photos of yourself if you don't want them online" both unnecessarily shames the victim of an actual crime — hacking and theft of personal property — and seems to give a pass to the actual criminals in question by leaving the hacker out of the question altogether. Remember, Christopher Chaney was sentenced in 2012 to 10 years in prison for stealing and posting photos of Scarlett Johansson. Ms. Johansson, of course, committed no crime by photographing herself. It's just a shame that so many people need to be reminded of that.

Analysis

How to better protect yourself

We spoke with Rik Ferguson, vice president of Security Research at Trend Micro, an information firm, about how the hack might have taken place and what people can do to make their online data safe.

"The celebrities' accounts could have been targeted in several different ways," says Ferguson. "But the most likely scenario is this one: The hacker already knew the victim's email address for using iCloud, clicked the 'I forgot my password' link, a standard 'security question,' like their mother's maiden name, popped up and the hacker answered it."

These answers aren't hard to find. "The trouble for celebrities is that much of their personal information is not so secret," says Ferguson. "The attacker could have also accessed their iCloud via their webmail account, which was perhaps easier to hack."

Opinion

Gervais blames the victims

Ricky Gervais was among those quick to admonish victims of the latest hacking scandal, tweeting: "Celebrities, make it harder for hackers to get nude pics of you from your computer by not putting nude pics of yourself on your computer." The almost immediate backlash to the tweet prompted Gervais to delete it and go on a campaign of clearing up his opinions on the matter.

Lena Dunham, on the other hand, took a more serious tone. "The 'don't take naked pics if you don't want them online' argument is the 'she was wearing a short skirt' of the web. Ugh," she posted.

2 CULTURE

List

The names of more than 100 famous actresses, musicians and athletes were included in a list of purported hacking victims, nude photos of whom circulated online this weekend after a massive image dump. There was one male member on the list, though — sort of — as the final entry on the posting mentioned "a shot of Alison Brie and Dave Franco." Some of the other big names on the list include (for more go to Metro.us):

- Rihanna
- Lea Michele
- Selena Gomez
- Lizzy Caplan
- Kim Kardashian
- Mary-Kate Olsen
- Aubrey Plaza
- Jenny McCarthy
- Krysten Ritter
- Vanessa Hudgens
- Brie Larson
- Jessica Brown Findlay
- Yvonne Strahovski
- Hilary Duff
- Wynona Ryder

Talking points

Brangelina want an island for themselves

Following their surprise nuptials, Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt have taken their brood to Gozo, a small island near Malta, for a working honeymoon to film scenes for their new film, "By the Sea," while they celebrate their union — and no one else is invited. "A lot of people have agreed to leave the island so they can have privacy to film the movie," a source tells Page Six. They've even paid locals to leave.

The newlyweds take privacy to a new, wealthy extreme.

Spears back with controversial ex?

In the wake of her split last week from boyfriend David Lucado, Britney Spears is reportedly reaching out to some questionable old contacts. Sources tell Radar Online that despite intense supervision from her father, Spears has been secretly texting controversial ex-boyfriend Adnan Ghalib. Spears and Ghalib dated in 2008 before she was placed under a conservatorship. In 2009, her minders obtained a three-year restraining order against Ghalib.

Nev Schulman: Your 'In Real Life' love guru

The "Catfish" host has a new book about putting your best self forward — both online and off.

Nev Schulman shares the catfish tricks to keep an eye out for in his new book, "In Real Life." / ALYSSA LAVINE

"Catfish" host Nev Schulman wants you to know that it's not them — it's you. In his new book, "In Real Life: Love, Lies & Identity in the Digital Age" (out today), Schulman explains that the key to establishing a long-lasting bond is to take a look inward. Yes, it also helps to know how to use Google's reverse image search. And you should know that a Facebook account with only 12 friends is a red flag. But Schulman says there's way more to it than that. We asked him to share his best words of wisdom for both online and offline dating.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

On online dating:

"If you're looking for a relationship, using the Internet is great, but it should just be a means. The trouble is when you go online as a distraction or without any clear intention or specific goal. That's when you get into trouble."

Be aware of your soft spots

"It's not what to look out for in other people. It's what to look out for in yourself. ... Getting catfished isn't about someone being a really good liar or Internet user. It's about being vulnerable and perhaps unsatisfied or insecure, and somebody taking advantage of that."

Don't fake it

"We all have doubts, fears and insecurities in our happiness. When you hide that from other people, you're also kind of hiding it from yourself. If everybody goes around pretending to be the happy, fulfilled version of themselves and ignores the truth about things they're feeling, then we're all participating in the same game of not really connecting in a meaningful way or being open and honest with each other."

Real relationships take work

"I think we all sort of subscribe to this fairy tale version of how love conquers all and how once you find your soulmate everything falls into place. That's just crazy. It doesn't work like that. I think we've become disillusioned that we will find the perfehct person now that we have online dating and then it won't take any work and compromise — but it does, no matter what."

Pierce Brosnan hits the streets with Olga Kurylenko in "The November Man." / ALEKSANDAR LETIC

Pierce Brosnan: Back in action

Interview. The last James Bond was happy to return to blowing stuff up in "The November Man."

Speaking about his new action-thriller "The November Man," Pierce Brosnan is more than eager to talk about the challenges of playing a very different kind of spy. The Irish actor is not only the star, he's also the executive producer of the film — and he was determined to make sure his work as rogue ex-CIA man Peter Deveraux was grittier, grimmer and very different from his past outings in the cloak-and-dagger field.

You've been doing comedies lately, including "The Love Punch" and "A Long Way Down." What convinced you to make a return to the action and spy genres?
It just seemed like fertile ground — if not now, when? I had my days as James Bond, and they were glorious and wonderful and productive. We brought [Bond] back after six dormant years ... so it was invigorating to be a part of it. Then when the curtain fell — surprisingly and unexpectedly, while I was looking the other way, it was just over. And I had a certain void, a vacuum. So when we set sail in developing "The November Man," it just seemed to hit now with the geopolitical happenings going on.

You talk about your earlier work in the espionage genre, but there was never a scene in your older films where Mr. Bond, like Deveraux does in this film, mortally wounds an innocent girl so he can delay his enemies and better make his getaway. Was that scene important to establish Deveraux as that dangerous, that driven?
Well, it's a shocking act, on paper and on screen. It's one that, really, you roll the dice on and you hope that you don't disconnect with your audience. But I think that the story, by that stage, you already know that anything can happen — and it does in the most graphic way. I love that scene. I think it's something that defines the character, that keeps the audience off-center.

Made by hand

Real old school

In an age of CGI marvels, is it nice to take part in an action film that's about real car chases, real explosions, real effects?
Well, it worked for us. ... We knew we weren't going to have this monolithic graphic overture of CGI or anything like that. It's a handmade, hand-wrought film, and everything's in-camera. And that was the pleasure of it — to be in the streets, to make a movie that was tangible and real and to be blowing stuff up in the streets.

The real 'Ghostbuster'

Looking back.
On the eve of the theatrical re-release of "Ghostbusters," Ernie Hudson reflects on having his part cut way down.

Ernie Hudson poses with "Ghostbusters" memorabilia at the Michigan Comic Con in 2014. / GETTY IMAGES

Ernie Hudson remembers the mechanic who had a tattoo of him on his leg. He was buying a car, and the guy went up to him, pulled up his pant leg and there was Hudson as Winston Zeddemore, his character in "Ghostbusters."

"I thought, 'Wow, that's different,'" Hudson recalls.

Still, his memories are not all fond. Looking back on the film, which turned 30 in June and has now been reissued in theaters, Hudson repeatedly calls it "a mixed blessing." He's by turns grateful for his fans and his co-stars and still hurt at what the studios did to him and what was once a larger role.

For starters, there's the pesky fact that he doesn't enter the film until past the halfway mark. It wasn't always that way.

"Originally Winston came in at the very beginning and was very involved throughout the whole film," Hudson recalls. "Winston was the guy who got slimed at the hotel. Winston was the guy who thought of the Marshmallow Man at the end." When Hudson showed up for the first day, he was shocked by a new script that took out half of his screen time.

Visit Metro.us to read more from Hudson about shooting the film.

The snubbing didn't stop with the shoot. "I remember driving down Sunset Boulevard and seeing the big billboard for the first time. There were only three guys on there, and Winston wasn't included," he remembers.

He does admit that feeling like an outsider did help with the role: "Winston is a guy a lot of people, especially average people, related to. He was the guy who wasn't a scientist. He wasn't zany; he gets the job done."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Remembering Harold Ramis

Hudson is careful to talk about the perks of being in the film, especially working with his three main co-stars. But he does say the late Harold Ramis, who played Dr. Egon Spengler, was his "go-to-guy, the guy who talked me through it — and for that I'll be eternally grateful to him."

3 'Viber'

Especially when traveling abroad, roaming charges can add unnecessary bills on top of an already expensive journey. This app allows you to make calls and message friends for free. Just get to a Wi-Fi signal.

5 'SkyScanner'

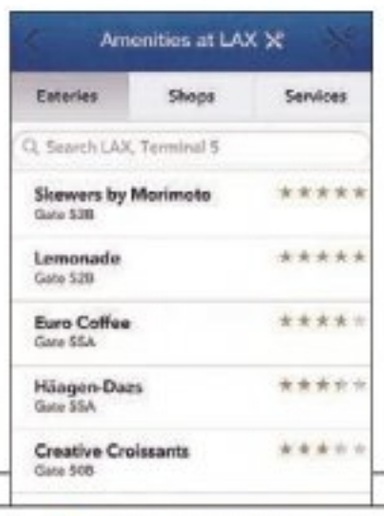
Find a flight on your phone. It's that simple.

6 'Waze'

In real time, drivers share obstacles along your route such as construction, traffic and accidents. Not only will "Waze" help you navigate uncharted territory, it will help you get there quickly as well.

7 'GateGuru'

Plug in the flight number, and you can sit at the bar and have a drink without worrying that your plane will leave without you. Push notifications remind you when boarding time is getting close and let you know if your flight has been delayed. It also updates with any gate changes.



8 'Yelp'

Ever stand on a foreign street corner wondering which restaurant looks like a decent spot to eat? Don't judge a diner by the glow of its fluorescent signs — get the app that shows fellow travelers' (and more importantly, locals') reviews of not just menu quality but whether you'll regret your food decisions the next day.

How to teach your city kid about nature

Simple teaching moments are all around. / COLOURBOX

Get outside. If you think living in a concrete jungle means denying your kids a childhood full of nature, it's time to think again.

While Philadelphia has a rich culture and lots to do, you may fear it's lacking in the nature department. But Sarah Schmidt, a digital and print media editor for the Brooklyn Botanic Garden, ensures that there are plenty of ways to teach your children about wildlife without taking a country vacation.

The Brooklyn Botanic Garden just released a book called "The Kid's Guide to Exploring Nature," which can help kids and parents discover animals and plant life together. Inside are activity ideas, such as what to look for on a scavenger hunt.

Things you see every day can present easy teaching moments. "There are six different types of pigeons, and they all have different feather patterns," Schmidt says. Pointing this out to you child might spark a deeper curiosity in animals and science.

The change of seasons naturally sparks conversations about nature. Talking with your kids about why and how leaves change colors during the fall or explaining why a squirrel is burying acorns are small teaching moments that can have a lasting impact.

"We encourage parents to find ways to really interact with nature with their kids and take a close look at different things. It encourages kids to engage at a different level and gives them an entirely new experience." Schmidt

If Sykes is already so rich, why is he working as a columnist?

Re: 'Column is no place for opinions' (Metro, Aug. 28-Sept. 1) Thank you to letter writer Adam Thompson for calling out columnist Tim Sykes. I'm glad I'm not the only one tired of Sykes' distortions and repetitive "vacation shaming" of the president.

I'm so sick of this phony "millionaire" who for some reason has to pen a column for Metro and run a get-rich-quick website to make ends meet.

RICHARD FEINBERG, VIA EMAIL

Column is perfect place to express opinions

Re: 'Column is no place for opinions' (Metro, Aug. 28-Sept. 1) In response to letter writer Adam Thompson, he has no right to tell anyone where and what they can write about. Mr. Sykes has the right to write about whatever he chooses. I'm sure that Mr. Thompson is an Obama fan, otherwise he wouldn't care what Mr. Sykes wrote about.

Impressive Owls

Temple picks up weekly awards

After Temple blew away SEC opponent Vanderbilt 37-7 Friday night to open their season, a few players got recognized for their stellar play. Quarterback P.J. Walker earned AAC Offensive Player of the Week honorable mention while his teammate, cornerback Tavon Young was the conference's defender of the week outright thanks to his two interceptions.

EAGLES HAVE TOOLS TO WIN SUPER BOWL

The many naysayers who believe the Eagles have no chance to win the Super Bowl this season are not thinking logically. These so-called experts prefer to believe the defense isn't good enough, the quarterback is a one-year wonder or the coach is due for a major comeuppance.

But here's what the skeptics are not considering: After a remarkable 10-6 season, the 2014 Eagles are returning with the smartest coach in the NFL, the most efficient quarterback, the best running back, an improved defense and, of course, no Patrick Chung.

There are really only two major concerns entering the season that begins Sunday at Lincoln Financial Field: injuries and the kicker.

These Eagles are not deep enough to lose their biggest weapon, running back LeSean McCoy — or Jeremy Maclin, Jason Peters, DeMeco Ryans or Malcolm Jenkins, for that matter. The drop-off at any of those positions would dip the Birds below championship-caliber.

Above all, concerns about the kicking game are going to haunt the team all season.

Please note that the starting quarterback, Nick Foles, is not listed among those indispensable players. If Mark Sanchez proved anything in this endless preseason, it is that coach Chip Kelly can turn the ordinary into the extraordinary. In Kelly's offense, even a recent NFL bust like Sanchez can complete 25 of 31 passes and look like Joe Montana.

That's really where all conversation about the prospects of these Eagles must begin, with the maestro of the most exciting offense in the NFL as he enters his second season in Philadelphia. Chip Kelly managed to overcome the mess left behind by Andy Reid and won the NFC East last year. Who really is dumb enough to bet against Kelly in 2014?

In fact, because of Kelly, the injury issue might not be the fatal blow so many skeptics expect it to be. Remember, the Birds had their healthiest season in memory last year, due at least in part to Kelly's healthy-eating, heavy-sleeping initiative. There's genius behind those smoothies.

The biggest disappointment so far has been Kelly's recklessness at a position — placekicker — that helped to foil the Eagles in the playoffs last season. After Alex Henery's short kickoff led to the New Orleans' game-winning field goal, the kicker ultimately lost his job to Cody Parkey, a big-footed, erratic rookie who was 14 for 19 last year at Auburn — including misses from 33 and 36 yards. Every field goal attempt promises to be an adventure in 2014.

Otherwise, there is little to fear in the season that awaits our favorite football team, which has the look right now of a 12-win juggernaut. The offense seems unstoppable. The defense appears to be much better, especially with the worst player of 2013, safety Patrick Chung, 250 miles away in New England.

Ah, why not? Naysayers be damned, it says here that the Eagles are going to win it all this season.

Nick Foles looks to repeat his breakout performance. / GETTY IMAGES

Cataldi. Taney Dragon celebration was nice, but just a bit too much

Taney's Mid-Atlantic Championship team enjoyed spectacular fanfare throughout the last few weeks. / CHARLES MOSTOLLER, METRO

Is the celebration over yet for the Taney Dragons, a bunch of kids who finished third in the U.S. at the Little League World Series and have been honored like champions ever since?

Just last week, after back-to-back losses, they scored a rally in Center City, a live appearance on the "Today" show and (gasp) a parade down Broad Street.

Imagine what would have happened if they had actually won.

Now, granted, the story of the Taney Dragons captivated our city and the entire country, but — as predicted here at the height of the mania — it did not end well, despite the determination of the media and Mayor Michael Nutter to turn their abrupt ouster, and superstar Mo'ne Davis' ultimate failure on the mound, into a fairy tale.

You know a story has moved beyond the realm of sanity when a legend like Jim Gardner of 6ABC describes Taney's futile three-run rally in their final game as "courageous." This was a dozen young people playing baseball. The only thing courageous about it was the effort by 12- and 13-year-olds to overcome the absurd pressure created by adults.

If the public weren't already conditioned to every story being the biggest thing that ever happened, involving one disposable hero after another, the truth would have come out long ago about the Dragons and their magical run. They were simply the latest means for a pack of shameless adults to make money and win acclaim.

And yes, that includes our mayor, who — after years of whining about the expense of sports parades — cheapened every future event by spearheading one that was undeserved.

Final thought

"Mo'ne Davis was indeed the feel-good story of our barren sports summer — but then the adults came along and screwed it up." Cataldi

Idle thoughts

What else is eating at Angelo Cataldi this week?

- Despite exceeding all expectations in the preseason, Michael Sam was cut last week by St. Louis, and we're supposed to believe his release had nothing to do with him being gay? Please. There was a reason why no NFL player had come out before this. Michael Sam proved why.

MICHAEL SAM WILL TEST THE FREE AGENCY WATERS OR JOIN A PRACTICE SQUAD.

- Sixers GM Sam Hinkie pulled off another amazing trade last week, acquiring center Hasheem Thabeet from Oklahoma City for exactly what the player was worth – nothing. Of course, Hinkie then immediately released Thabeet. Just one question: Why are we waiting so long to hold a parade for Sam Hinkie?
- OK, I give up. What was Eagles coach Chip Kelly trying to accomplish by bringing in Carey Spear — otherwise known as "Murderleg" — to challenge for the kicking job? Did Kelly feel his team needed someone with a really cool nickname?
- Eagles offensive tackle Lane Johnson will spend his four-week suspension for using a banned substance working out in Dallas. If living for a month in Dallas doesn't teach him a lesson, nothing will.

Combined no-hitter is Ruiz's third of career

MLB. Four Phillies combine to throw the team's first ever combined no-hitter, putting Carlos Ruiz in elite company.

Cole Hamels struck out seven Braves during his six-innings of no-hit baseball Monday. / GETTY IMAGES

Housekeeping

The Phillies made several roster moves Monday.

- John Mayberry Jr. was traded to the Blue Jays.
- Call-ups included Maikel Franco, Cameron Rupp, Tony Gwynn Jr., Cesar Hernandez and Miguel Alfredo Gonzalez.
- Reliever Mike Adams was also activated.

What does Phillies catcher and fan favorite Carlos Ruiz have in common with hall-of-famers Yogi Berra, Roy Campanella and Ray Schalk?

After catching a combined no-hitter Monday afternoon, thrown by four Phillies hurlers, Ruiz joins the three as one of 14 men in baseball history to catch three no-no's (Red Sox catcher Jason Varitek is the only one with four).

The first two, of course, came in 2010 in the form of a perfect game and playoff no-hitter from future Cooperstown honoree Roy Halladay.

The third for Chooch wasn't quite as picturesque.

Ruiz helped Cole Hamels work his way around five walks, a hit batter and 108 pitches in six frames. But the excessive heat and the workload over the course of six innings forced Phillies manager Ryne Sandberg to make a tough choice, and he pulled Hamels and turned things over to the bullpen.

"We have one of the best bullpens in the league lately," Hamels told ESPN after the game, "and I have all the confidence in the world in them."

When Diekman entered the game in the seventh, he didn't really know what he was getting himself into.

"I had no idea until I looked at the scoreboard running in," Diekman said, "and I was like, alright, I guess we have that going on."

Diekman struck out two and Giles, in the eighth, struck out the side to set up Papelbon, who volunteered to enter the game in a rare non-save situation.

"It was one of the greatest experiences of my life," Papelbon told ESPN after the game. "I was so happy, so ecstatic I couldn't control myself."

DID YOU KNOW THAT

AGITATION AND AGGRESSION

ARE COMMON SYMPTOMS OF ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE?

CONSIDER CLINICAL RESEARCH PARTICIPATION

Alzheimer's disease (AD) is frustrating. Sudden outbursts of anger, aggression or agitation can be part of Alzheimer's disease progression. Managing these symptoms can be difficult. But, you're not alone! Doctors are working daily to find treatments.

The HarmonyAD clinical research study is being conducted to determine if an investigational drug given as a pill can safely and effectively reduce the symptoms of agitation and aggression in people with Alzheimer's disease.

To take part in the study, individuals must:

- Be at least 50 years old
- Have a diagnosis of Alzheimer's disease
- Experience at least moderate agitation and/or aggression
- Exhibit agitation and/or aggression at least once a week
- Have a study partner, informant or caregiver who is willing to support and be involved in the AD patient's participation in the study

The study will last approximately 3 months, during which participants will attend 7 clinic study visits and 4 telephone contact visits.

Participants will be monitored throughout the study. The investigational drug and study-related procedures will be provided at no cost. Cost of travel and meals related to the study may be reimbursed.

To find out more about the HarmonyAD clinical research study, please do one of the following:

- Visit the website, www.harmonyadstudy.com
